

Opposite A palette of deep greens, reclaimed wood, and copper accents was used in this wine country kitchen designed by Jennifer Robin, Jennifer Robin Interiors. A mirrored-tile backsplash provides reflective light that enhances the kitchen's indoor/outdoor connection. Architecture by Wade Design Architects

The large apron front fireclay sink adds durability and a visual break to the wood-wrapped kitchen. Custom cabinetry and paneling disguise appliances for a clean, cohesive design in this mountain home designed by Jennifer Robin, Jennifer Robin Interiors.

This spread Jennifer Robin, Jennifer Robin Interiors, added some drama to this neutral-colored space with the large-scale chandelier contrasting against the oak-paneled wall. The palette stays relatively quiet so that the surrounding views can take center stage and make their statement with the thoughtfulness of the design and materials used, and the play of scale and high-end textural finishes. "I often draw color inspiration from the surrounding landscape to blur the lines between indoors and outdoors and create a greater sense of connectivity with nature," says Robin. This was achieved with antique mirrored tiles that reflect the views. Architecture by Amy A. Alper, Architect

Opposite An antique butcher block island adds character while the handmade tile and shiplap walls bring texture to this farmhouse-inspired pool house designed by Jennifer Robin, Jennifer Robin Interiors. Architecture by Sutro Architects

Following pages This kitchen in California wine country designed by Jennifer Robin, Jennifer Robin Interiors, features an attractive and durable soapstone countertop on the island and Taj Mahal granite for surrounding countertops to create a rustic yet glamorous feel. Robin selected textural honeycomb tile for the backsplash to add warmth and visual interest. Architecture by Karen Jensen, Jensen Architects

